RESEARCHER, WRITER, AND EDITOR

I am a social anthropologist with an academic and professional background in the sustainable development of environments and societies. My passion lies in connecting with individuals, communicating knowledge, and catalyzing processes that can foster societal and environmental resilience across diverse sectors and fields of activity. My life skills, which include attentiveness, clarity of thought and understanding, good organizational skills, reliability and punctuality, and collaboration and teamwork, have guided my academic work and professional activities as a researcher, program associate, and consultant working with diverse international organizations. These organizations include the UNDP and WWF in Bhutan, the Ford Foundation and International Development Research Centre (IDRC) offices in India, and the Center for International Forestry Research (CIFOR) and the World Agroforestry Center (ICRAF) in Indonesia. I currently work contractually as an editor for several leading international academic editing companies and universities. My experience broadly includes in-depth fieldwork and secondary research, writing (academic and non-academic), editing of academic and non-profit works to support authors in effectively conveying their message and its import, and proposal development. I am continually seeking to augment my skills and to build new ones, and I welcome career opportunities in the areas of communication (writing and editing) and publication of knowledge that contributes to making our world more resilient.

Core Competencies
